

Marielle DeMara ('12) spent the night at the Global Village to learn about the role of the Heiffer Project in combating world hunger, representing 100% of our students who are asked to consider how they can contribute to the betterment of the world through community service.

Annabelle Roberts ('12) helped papier mache an 8 foot tall sun puppet for the middle school's annual circus, representing 100% of students who spent two weeks working with visiting artists from Wunderle's Big Top Adventures and formerly of Bread and Puppet. Their efforts resulted in performing a circus for an audience of three hundred.

Asa Rubin-Crump ('13) watched as parent and Veterinarian Chris Dutton dissected a cow cadaver during science class, representing 100% of students who have a chance to learn from visiting community members.

Mario Sacca ('13) listened attentively to a guest speaker with HIV/AIDS, representing 100% of TSA students who participate in an integrated curriculum that has been developed around relevant and personally meaningful topics.

Derek Swanson ('13) spoke up at the weekly middle school community meeting, representing 100% of students who are encouraged to actively engage in our community.

Colin Young ('12) took his turn emptying the compost bucket, representing 100% of the students who are working together each year toward creating a more environmentally sustainable community.

Abby Dutton ('13) visited the home of Henry Swayze in Tunbridge, Vermont in order to photograph and write about his energy efficient lifestyle. Her visit representing 100% of our students who did home visits throughout the Central V-alley to learn about energy conservation efforts and alternative energy technology in their community.

Erik Littlehales ('12) played on the middle schoolsoccer team, representing 85% of the students who play sports regardless of prior experience or ability level.

Caroline Atwood ('12) served as student editor of the second edition of the school newsletter "Our Times", representing 100% of the student body who wrote articles for this widely circulated student publication written to educate the general public about food related issues.

Sam Coxon ('12) interned as a Senate Page at the Vermont State House in the spring of 2008, representing one of two middle school students who took advantage of this opportunity.

Evan Roe ('13) took 9th place nationally with his teammates in the National Science Bowl held in Colorado in June of 2008, for building a hydro fuel cell model-car, representing 15% of middle school students who competed in this challenging competition